The book begins with the question, "Mommy, what do you see when you look at me?" The mother then goes on to describe all the wonderful things she sees in her child, from their rosy cheeks to their sparkling eyes. She sees their strength, their courage, and their kindness. She sees their dreams and their aspirations. She sees their potential to change the world.

As the mother speaks, the child begins to see themselves in a new light. They realize that they are not just a reflection of their mother's hopes and dreams, but that they are also unique and special in their own way. They begin to see their own strengths and their own potential. They begin to believe in themselves.
