There are many factors that contributed to the devastating impact of COVID-19. These include:

- Lack of early warning systems: We did not have adequate systems in place to detect and track new viruses. As a result, we were not able to take early action to contain the spread of COVID-19.
- Inadequate public health infrastructure: Our public health systems were not strong enough to handle the surge in cases. This led to overwhelmed hospitals, shortages of medical supplies, and a lack of access to testing and treatment.

- Political failures: Many governments failed to take the pandemic seriously and did not implement effective measures to contain its spread. This led to widespread infections and deaths.
- Lack of global cooperation: The world did not come together to fight the pandemic. This led to a lack of coordination and sharing of resources, which made it difficult to control the spread of the virus.

The COVID-19 pandemic has been a devastating event, but it has also taught us some valuable lessons. We now know that we need to invest in our public health systems, develop early warning systems, and improve global cooperation. We also need to be better prepared for the next pandemic.

In his new book, "Why COVID-19 Crushed Us and How We Can Defeat the Next Pandemic," Dr. David L. Heymann, a world-renowned epidemiologist, provides a comprehensive analysis of the COVID-19 pandemic. He explores the failures that led to its devastating impact and outlines strategies for preventing future pandemics.

Dr. Heymann argues that we need to make a fundamental shift in our approach to pandemics. We can no longer afford to wait until a pandemic is upon us to take action. We need to be proactive and invest in preparedness now.

Dr. Heymann's book is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the COVID-19 pandemic and prevent future pandemics. It is a comprehensive and authoritative guide to the science of pandemics and the public health measures that are needed to control them.
